Are you sad that Switzerland didn't even reach the group of 16 at the Soccer World Championship? Well, all is not lost. Check out the article on page 3 about the mock Championship in New York. Hopp Swiss Jaguars!!!

Every summer it is tradition for the Swiss Singing Society Harmonie to have a picnic. It used to be in the mountains, but we are getting older and the idea of not having to lug your folding chair or sitting on a blanket instead of on a chair is more and more appealing. So for the last 10 years we hosted the picnic in our garden. You definitely can't call it a picnic anymore. People outdo themselves in bringing fantastic salads and outlandish desserts. Sigi buys the Bratwurst and Rudi is our Master Grill-Chef. Many things are homemade. Harmonie does not only have good singers, they are also good cooks: This year, Martin brought his traditional Züpfe, Manfred baked a Linzertorte, Huldi baked Schenkeli and Madeleines, Sophie's Potato-Salad is legendary and our newest member Irene surprised us with a wonderful carrot salad. But just have a look for yourself!

I hope that you all had an enjoyable 1st of August and have a wonderful summer.

Swiss Chaplin Home a Museum

Charlie Chaplin's last home in Switzerland will become a Museum. Planned for decades, London and Los Angeles competed for this honor. Switzerland, however won out to feature the "Screen Legends Museum" as Chaplin was happiest in Corsey-sur-Vevey according to his son, Michael Chaplin.

Chaplin was barred from the United States during the years of McCarthyism, as the organization suspected him of harboring communistic sympathies. He returned only briefly twenty years later to receive an honorary Academy Award for his life's work. Charlie Chaplin lived for 20 years in Corsey-sur-Vevey on the Lake of Geneva and enjoyed a happy family life with his wife Oona with whom he had eight children. This reporter was fortunate enough to have met Chaplin and his wife personally at a reception on a movie set.

The Museum will feature objects of his life and highlight his career from the early beginnings in the Music Halls of his native London to stardom in Hollywood in such films as: The Little Tramp, The Immigrant, City Lights, The Great Dictator and more. The Museum will open in two years.

New York

Outstanding Woman: Barbara Rivera-Berger

Entre Nosotras, Inc., an organization established to empower Puerto Rican/Hispanic women throughout the State of New York, holds its award ceremonies during the Annual Legislative Conference of the New York State Assembly's Puerto Rican/Hispanic Task Force. Also known as the "Somos el Futuro" Conference, this is the largest gathering of Puerto Rican/Hispanic civic and political leaders in the state. At the 23rd conference, which was held in Albany from April 16th to 18th, 2010, twelve outstanding women were honored for their "significant contributions towards the development of the Puerto Rican and Hispanic communities." Among the awardees was Barbara Rivera-Berger, a mental health counselor on the staff of Eugenio María de Hostos Community College's Carlos L. Gonzalez Counseling Center.

Here is what Barbara says about herself:

I was born in Basel Switzerland and was raised by a mother with Latin background. My mother is from a Romantsch speaking community (Domat/Ems), which is a very old Latin minority community in the mountain area of Switzerland. My father was Swiss-German. I grew up in Allschwil and went through the Swiss school system until High School. I left school and then went through the Evening Matura in Basel, while working at the Basel Ballet with Heinz Spoerli. That was the beginning of working in an international community, helping ballet dancers who had problems. After that I entered the University of Basel and studied English. As I was unable to proceed in the theatre in Basel, I went to Emerson College in Boston, MA in 1992 to study acting and directing. From there I was able to do an internship at the Metropolitan Opera in New York. I lived in Bushwick, Brooklyn at that time and cleaned apartments while following my dream of becoming a play director. Later on I worked at the Swiss Mission to the United Nations as a messenger and eventually got a job as public information assistant at the United Nations. At the same time, pursuing my dream, I organized a Klezmer concert (Kol Simcha) at Carnegie Hall. I was assistant stage manager at an opera at La Mama and I also worked with my best friend Andrea Haenggi (amdat.org) who is now a well-known Swiss choreographer in New York.

As I encountered my own as well as my neighbor's difficulties receiving services in the community, and surviving in New York, my mission in life became wanting to help the Latin community members become more empowered. Having talked about poverty and hunger at the United Nations, I now wanted to make a difference in my new-found community in New York. I had no college degree so I had to go back to school in 2000. I got my undergraduate degree in psychology/creative arts therapy from the New School University in New York. After that I went to NYU (New York University) where I received my graduate degree in drama therapy in 2002.

I am now a New York State licensed psychotherapist and registered drama therapist. I also hold a post graduate certificate in alcohol and substance abuse counseling and have almost completed a 3 year post graduate training (completed in fall 2010) in Somatic Experiencing®, a body-awareness approach to treating post traumatic stress disorder. I work at HOSTOS Community College in the South Bronx, NY, with Iraqi and Afghanistan veterans and other students to help them overcome trauma and problems in college. It was a long journey from the Swiss mountains to the South Bronx.

*Soccer World Championship in South Africa and in New York!
Hopp Swiss Jaguars!*

Following an initiative by the South African Consulate General and in cooperation with Metro Soccer and SASF (Sports & Arts in Schools Foundation) the Hugo Newman College P.S. 180 in Harlem was selected to represent Switzerland in a Mock Soccer World Championship here in New York.

This is a particularly admirable story as this event exhibits the exemplary path of an underprivileged college that has come a long way. P.S. 180 used to be one of the most unsafe colleges in New York City, yet this year was awarded the "2010 Interagency Outstanding Early Child-

This soccer project showed in a congenial way, what influence endurance, positive energy and eagerness of an educational system starting with the individual students, teachers, the principal all the way to a third party foundation (SASF) can achieve, when bringing together sports & arts. With the world soccer tournaments at our doorsteps, Ambassador Bubb was instantly sympathetic to the idea of having Switzerland represented in this mock version of the games and endorsed the project with Swiss T-Shirts and educational material. The 9-11 year old boys came to the Consulate - well prepared - and were able to answer many of the questions that we presented in a Swiss-Quiz. They were thrilled about visiting the Consulate, seeing the offices, getting a feel for a Swiss business environment and last but not

California Screws anyone?

Max Buettiker has loose screws. Actually, he has tons of them! But then, that is to be expected if you have a screw machine shop! Not long ago he invited my husband Köbi to come and have a look. Having been a tool-maker by trade, he was obviously very interested. I just followed.

Born in Solothurn, Max learned his trade in the North Western part of Switzerland, that is where the watchmakers are at home. After his apprenticeship, he worked for a while for a watch company in Geneva, making the winding crowns for some of the most prestigious Swiss watches.

One of the old screw machines. Greasy and noisy but still going strong!

He had a job opportunity in London, where he also learned to speak English and from there it was just a long jump over here to Los Angeles. Like most Swiss, he worked for other companies until he opened his first small shop. In the beginning, his wife and even his son and daughter helped out in the evening or on weekends, when a job needed to be finished on time. Especially his daughter Elizabeth seemed to like it and, growing up, she was seen more and more on the machine shop floor and later in the front office. Now, married and mother of a three year old daughter, she starts taking over the whole operation, not hesitating to send her father for one to two months vacation to his native Switzerland.

The first machines Max bought were from Swiss companies called Tornos and Bechler. He still has many of them, working perfectly fine after 40 years of service. But these machines could only do so much.

The digital age arrived and soon Max started buying the latest, most advanced, computer-programmed models from Switzerland, which can do almost all possible operations at the same time, turning the part around, single point threading both ends, cross drilling, bending, slotting and crimping. A few years ago, all this needed a second operation. The difference between the old and new machines is also audible. While the old are drilled and slotted, then crimped, some are knurled or need a cross hole and some have to be bent. Whatever is on a blue print, the new machines can do it – and in one single operation. A long metal rod goes in at one end and the finished part comes out at the other end. I saw a machine that took about eight minutes to make just one fairly large screw, to be used in a guitar. Others parts are destined for submarines. One machine makes chests.

Right now, Max Buettiker has 35 of the old machines and 8 of the digital machines. His precision work has made him well known in various industry and Government branches. He only felt the recession slightly last year and has so many orders now that he,

his daughter Elizabeth, and their co-workers can barely handle them. You can really say that Max didn't screw up!

Now, if you are like me, a screw was just a screw, and a screw machine sounded like something slightly obscene. But boy was I in for a learning experience! WESTWARD –
Encounters with Swiss American Women

Written history of migration is largely the history of men, the Swiss author and journalist Susann Bosshard-Kälin claims. In contrast, her book "WESTWARD" is all about immigrant women. It's an English translation from the German book "WESTWÄRTS". Begegnungen mit Amerika-Schweizerinnen (eFeF Verlag 2009), to be published in late summer, and is sponsored by the Swiss American Historical Society (SAHS). The book explores how these Swiss immigrant women – all older than 65 and looking back – were shaped by two countries, two cultures, and two languages. They came from varied walks of life, from different social and professional backgrounds, and from diverse Swiss regions.

Their reasons for emigrating were manifold, be it in search of adventure, seeking an escape, an enrichment of their education, or for love. They talk about varied experiences, joys and crises, possibilities and longings. To provide a historical perspective in the second part of the book, the historian Leo Schelbert offers four portraits of Swiss women emigrating to 18th and 19th century America. The book concludes with his sketch of the 20th century status of women in the United States, the world the 15 women portrayed by Susann Bosshard-Kälin entered into.

The book "WESTWARD" opens a unique window into the lives of women, of Swiss, of immigrants, of 20th century people in general. It is a joy to read, rich in insight, and often moving. The English version will be available as of September 2010 from: SAHS Book Editor, 2523 Asbury Avenue, Evanston, IL 60201.

New York Swiss Wine in the City

The Swiss Wine Producers Provins Valais and Jean-René Germanier Vins, in association with Chandra Kurt, a Swiss Wine Consultant, have embarked on a remarkable and unique adventure: to organize, right in the middle of New York, the first bottling of wines from the Swiss canton of Valais.

Two years ago, in the heart of Manhattan's Soho, Chandra Kurt discovered the City Winery – a new concept in urban cellars – and came up with the idea of using this unique platform to introduce quality Swiss wines into the Big Apple. Responding to this initiative, two Valaisian wine cellars, Provins Valais and Jean-René Germanier Vins, decided to join forces in a common bottling project. The City Winery brings together in one place the two greatest passions of its creator Michael Dorf: wine and music. Much more than a simple cellar, at night it transforms itself into a live music club, where famous musicians such as Suzanne Vega or Elvis Costello have taken the stage. became a magnet for a hip and affluent generation in search of live music and great wines from all over the world. Won over by this unique concept, the two wine producers from the Valais have shipped a barrel of their best wines across the Atlantic: a Cayas, Syrah du Valais 2008 from Jean-René Germanier Vins and a Petite Arvine "Cru des Domaines" 2007 from Provins Valais. This pioneering voyage marks the historic arrival of the first two barrels of Swiss wine in New York. On May 3rd 2010 the first "Swiss Wine Bottling Party" took place. Winemakers, sommeliers, wine experts, gourmards, wine importers, wine enthusiasts, and members of the media were amongst those invited to attend this first-of-its-kind event for Swiss wines. A colourful event that introduced them to the secret of Swiss Wine.

If you have been one of millions of people sneezing and sniffing and suffering from hay fever over the past months, you might not think pollen is such a beautiful thing. But Swiss scientific photographer Martin Oeggerli may convince you otherwise. Oeggerli calls himself a "micronaut" because he explores the world of the small, using an electron scanning microscope to capture images that are barely visible to the naked eye. His pollen photos reveal not only their amazing designs and colors, but also details about their life. "He explores the natural world at the intersection of science and art," says Todd James, Senior Photo Editor of National Geographic Magazine, who recently devoted an entire article and photo gallery to Oeggerli's beautiful and detailed photographs of pollen.
